With new discoveries and applications every day, endocrinology is a vital part of your specialty.

Stay informed with the two most authoritative and up-to-date sources available:

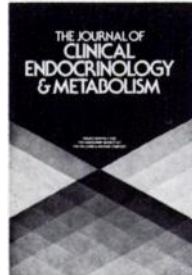

ENDOCRINOLOGY

Official Publication of
The Endocrine Society

Jack L. Kostyo, PhD, Editor-in-Chief; Jimmy D. Neill, PhD and Alfred E. Wilhelmi, DPhil, Editors

Endocrinology records for the basic scientist the advances in the fundamental knowledge of the endocrine glands and their hormones. The journal's emphasis is on the publication of research reports on all topics of basic endocrinological interest, rather than focusing on the individual specialties within the field. Each issue contains approximately 25 original articles, plus shorter features under the heading "Rapid Communications." A special announcements section serves to keep the reader advised of national and international events pertinent to the specialty, as well as planned meetings, symposia, and other events important to anyone interested in endocrinology.

JOURNAL OF CLINICAL ENDOCRINOLOGY AND METABOLISM

Official Publication of

Edited by Delbert A. Fisher, MD

The Journal of Clinical Endocrinology and Metabolism is the clinical counterpart of Endocrinology. Every month are published original papers on endocrine and metabolic studies related to human physiology and human disease, bringing to both the clinical practitioner and the basic researcher the very latest information on the application of research advances to the practice of medicine. Each issue also contains case reports, book reviews, editorials on topics relevant to the specialty, preliminary communications, letters to the editor, and announcements of Society meetings and awards.
